Driving directions from orlando to tampa

In the quick calculation above, we thought that you had a private plane and just wanted to know the time in the air from city to city. But most of us will fly private airlines (First Class or Coach). This means that you need to consider all the extra travel times to arrive at the airport, wait for your flight, and get to your destination. To provide a better estimate of actual travel, we have organized our flight itineraries with the actual airport. You can eventually customize this plan to select your own airport and flights. But now it's an example of choosing to give you an idea of how airport-to-airport travel works. Departure airport: Orlando International Airport (MCO) Arrival airport: Tampa International Airport (TPA) allows you to predict travel times to and from the airport, depending on how far away the airport is from downtown. To get to the airport: Take a look at the actual flights to tpa via the MLL via FLL within 15 minutes to your destination. You can see how long it takes to fly, such as take-off and landing, time to take a taxi on the runway, and about two hours of average transit time. Initial flight time: 54-minute connecting airport: Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport (FLL) Connecting flight time: 57 minutes now you can know the total travel time from Orlando to Tampa, including time to and from the airport, about two hours from the departure airport on the TSA security line, waiting at the gate, and connecting flights with a two-hour layover. Total travel times: Check out flight planners to learn more about this flight plan including recommended airports, airlines and routes: Level Contributor 209 posts a distance from Tampa, and 14 years ago we tried to book airfare for our trip in April, and I want to know whether it will be worth driving from Orlando to save airfare? We've always flown to Orlando, so we don't even know what the driving distance between the two is. Help! Level Contributor 11,355 posts 16 reviews and 148 assisted votes 1. Re: Driving away from Tampa, and it's worth 14 years ago that well after a 9-hour flight to Disney Mom coming from the UK we often took that trip to the station. In other words, we fly to Orlando and then drive to the Gulf Coast. We can take the time to get through Tampa at a certain time, but it doesn't seem to be any big deal. However, going to Orlando should be easy because Tampa's airport is next to the highway, and you will be on your way in time. The drive is a highway until 192. Kissimi is a little more than an hour away. I would definitely go for it if the storage is big enough. Absolutely straight forward - nothing afraid. We will drive to WDW next Thursday and then leave home from Orlando. I was told that morning rush hour in the Tampa area could go slow. Are you planning to rent a car when you land in Tampa? I found some transportation from Tampa to Orlando, but it was a greyhound bus and I didn't have many other options available. If savings are important and transportation is there, I will go for it. When I booked a flight from Southwest, I noticed that there was no big fare difference between the two cities, and I booked a one-way one-way trip. Merry Christmas and happy travel plans! Re: By car from Tampa, it's worth 14 years ago side note: If you're flying to Orlando and staying in a Disney property, transportation to and from the hotel is free. Maybe another thing to consider. It's an easy drive, but construction on I-4 (part of I-4 is always under construction) can cause traffic delays, and if you don't arrive or depart during peak traffic hours, you should check. The driving time is about 90 minutes - less traffic delays - and the distance is about 80-90 miles provided or taken depending on the location of the hotel. Kissimi is closer than the location of I-Drive. Tampa Airport is very good and car rental is simple. I also used it as my replacement airport on Ft Myers, because it has more flights and time to choose. Level Contributor 2,919 posts 1 review 5. Re: Driving away from Tampa, and it's worth 14 years ago I just came home from making a drive across I-4 and picked up my aunt from Clearwater for the holidays. There is construction for about five miles (when you leave TIA) from I-275 to I-4. Then there was the construction of Lakeland about two miles, and it was no longer built until near 192 exchanges. There is a lot of construction in the east in 192, but west 192 is fine. The traffic was good and there were no delays. It takes about 1.5 hours from Tampa to the 192 interchange. Believe it or not, after posting last night I was able to book 4 tickets for 834.40 tickets in the Southwest with internet specials and eventually don't have to fly to Tampa. They don't advertise this. You need to be a little flexible on your date. We saved more than 400.00 by changing the departure date to the day before the original departure!! That's just crazy. Anyway, thanks again for the information. Merry Christmas!! Donna* Level Contributor 11,355 posts 16 reviews 148 assisted votes 7. Re: Driving the streets in Tampa, and it's worth 14 years ago it's a festive miracle! Thank you for choosing the Gulf Coast as a vacation home provider during your Florida vacation. You must register with our office to collect directions and entry instructions for vacation homes. Please do not check in before 3pm on the day of arrival. The road to our office is as follows: The Tampa International Airport exit remains on dual transportation for a few miles from Tampa International Airport. Follow the signs south of Interstate 275. Once on I-275 you will eventually cross Tampa Bay via the 'Sun Shine Skyway Bridge', which will require a toll of about $1.25 shortly after crossing the bridge and you will take the south exit on the interstate towards Naples. Skip the next paragraph and leave the Orlando area via interstate and go west to Tampa. Leave I-4 at Exit 9, join Interstate 75 and head to Naples. Leave Interstate 75 and turn left on state road 64, which moves eastward. About two miles remain on the SR64. On The Lakewood Ranch Wide Road, move to the right, and then left to Gatewood Drive (just before the ACE hardware store). Go immediately to Canterbury Commons, where the office is located.
